

No. 19-1191 (and consolidated cases)

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

IN RE: PENNEAST PIPELINE COMPANY, LLC

On Appeal from an Order of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

APPELLEE PENNEAST PIPELINE COMPANY, LLC'S PETITION FOR PANEL REHEARING OR REHEARING EN BANC

Paul D. Clement
Erin E. Murphy
Kasdin Miller Mitchell
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
1301 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20004
Phone: 202.389.5000
Email: paul.clement@kirkland.com
Email: erin.murphy@kirkland.com
Email: kasdin.mitchell@kirkland.com

James M. Graziano, Esquire
Archer & Greiner, P.C.
One Centennial Square
33 E. Euclid Avenue
Haddonfield, NJ 08033
Phone: 856.795.2121
Email: jgraziano@archerlaw.com

Michael B. Wigmore
Jeremy C. Marwell
Matthew X. Etchemendy
Vinson & Elkins LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 500 West
Washington, DC 20037
Phone: 202.639.6507
Email: mwigmore@velaw.com
Email: jmarwell@velaw.com
Email: metchemendy@velaw.com

Counsel for Appellee PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | Page |
|---|-------------|
| Table Of Authorities | ii |
| Rule 35.1 Statement Regarding Rehearing En Banc | v |
| Introduction | 1 |
| Background | 3 |
| I. Congressional Delegation Of Eminent Domain Authority Under The NGA | 3 |
| II. Procedural Background | 4 |
| Argument..... | 7 |
| I. Rehearing Is Warranted On This Question Of Exceptional National Importance Because The Panel Decision Jeopardizes FERC’s Orderly Administration Of The Natural Gas Pipeline Grid. | 7 |
| A. Congress Lawfully Delegated The Federal Government’s Eminent Domain Authority, Including Its Ability To Condemn State Property In Court..... | 7 |
| B. Sovereign Immunity Does Not Apply To These In Rem Federal Condemnation Actions..... | 12 |
| C. The Question Presented Is Exceptionally Important. | 15 |
| II. At Bare Minimum, The Court Should Invite FERC’s Views. | 17 |
| Conclusion | 19 |
| Certificate Of Bar Membership, Privacy Redactions, And Identical Electronic And Hard Copy Versions | 20 |
| Certificate Of Virus Scan | 20 |
| Certificate Of Compliance | 21 |
| Certificate Of Service..... | 22 |

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

| Cases: | Page(s) |
|---|----------------|
| Alden v. Maine , 527 U.S. 706 (1999)..... | 14 |
| Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Hall , 453 U.S. 571 (1981)..... | 9 |
| Blatchford v. Native Vill. of Noatak , 501 U.S. 775 (1991)..... | 12 |
| Cent. Va. Cmty. Coll. v. Katz , 546 U.S. 356 (2006)..... | 11, 13 |
| Cherokee Nation v. S. Kan. Ry. , 135 U.S. 641 (1890)..... | 11 |
| Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe of Idaho , 521 U.S. 261 (1997)..... | 16 |
| Myersville Citizens for a Rural Cmty. v. FERC , 783 F.3d 1301 (D.C. Cir. 2015)..... | 17 |
| NAACP v. Fed. Power Comm’n , 425 U.S. 662 (1976)..... | 3 |
| Presley v. City of Charlottesville , 464 F.3d 480 (4th Cir. 2006) | 14 |
| Regents of Univ. of Minn. v. LSI Corp. , 926 F.3d 1327 (Fed. Cir. 2019) | 13 |
| Shaffer v. Heitner , 433 U.S. 186 (1977)..... | 13 |
| Tenn. Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood , 541 U.S. 440 (2004)..... | 12, 13, 14, 15 |
| Thatcher v. Tenn. Gas Transmission Co. , 180 F.2d 644 (5th Cir. 1950) | 3 |

Cases—Continued: Page(s)

| | |
|---|----|
| United States v. 6.45 Acres of Land , 409 F.3d 139 (3d Cir. 2005) | 14 |
| United States v. Davis , 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019)..... | 11 |
| Upper Skagit Indian Tribe v. Lundgren , 138 S. Ct. 1649 (2018)..... | 13 |

Administrative Cases:

| | |
|---|---|
| In re Ala. Power Co. , 2 F.P.C. 479 (1941)..... | 9 |
|---|---|

Statutes:

| | |
|-------------------------------|-------|
| 15 U.S.C. §717f(c)(1)(A)..... | 3 |
| 15 U.S.C. §717f(h)..... | 3, 8 |
| 16 U.S.C. §814..... | 9, 10 |
| 16 U.S.C. §824p(e)(1)..... | 10 |
| 28 U.S.C. §2403(a) | 17 |

Rules:

| | |
|-----------------------------------|---|
| Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(1)(B) | 7 |
|-----------------------------------|---|

Other Authorities:

| | |
|---|----|
| Amendments to the Natural Gas Act: Hearings on H.R. 2185, H.R. 2235, H.R. 2292, H.R. 2569, and H.R. 2956 Before the H. Comm. on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, 80th Cong. (1947) | 9 |
| Anatomy of a Condemnation Case , U.S. Dep’t of Justice, https://bit.ly/2mNBIOR | 16 |
| Nancy A. McLaughlin, Condemning Open Space: Making Way for National Interest Electric Transmission Corridors (or Not) , 26 Va. Env’tl. L.J. 399 (2008) | 16 |

| Other Authorities—Continued: | Page(s) |
|-------------------------------------|----------------|
| S. Rep. No. 80-429 (1947) | 8, 9 |

RULE 35.1 STATEMENT REGARDING REHEARING EN BANC

I express a belief, based on a reasoned and studied professional judgment, that this appeal involves a question of exceptional importance, i.e., whether the Eleventh Amendment prevents natural gas pipeline companies—to which Congress has expressly delegated federal eminent domain authority under the Natural Gas Act to secure necessary rights-of-way for federally approved interstate pipeline projects—from bringing condemnation claims against a state or its agencies in federal court.

Dated: October 22, 2019

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell

Jeremy C. Marwell

Vinson & Elkins LLP

2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW

Suite 500 West

Washington, DC 20037

Phone: 202.639.6507

Email: jmarwell@velaw.com

Counsel for PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

INTRODUCTION

For over 70 years, Section 7(h) of the Natural Gas Act (“NGA”) has been understood to authorize natural gas companies to condemn the necessary rights-of-way for federally approved interstate natural gas pipelines—including properties in which states hold interests. Congress’s decision to vest natural gas companies with the federal government’s eminent domain authority reflects the reality that state governments, like other landowners, may oppose pipeline development for political reasons, or because they prefer infrastructure to be built elsewhere. Absent federal eminent domain authority, a single landowner can veto a federally approved pipeline. It is unsurprising that federal condemnation authority extends to property in which a state claims an interest: no interstate pipeline of any significant length can be built without crossing some such land, from river bottoms to lands encumbered by conservation easements.

The panel decision here, which categorically immunizes states from NGA condemnation actions initiated by certificate holders authorized by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (“FERC” or “Commission”) to secure a FERC-approved route, upends 70 years of well-established practice and threatens immediate disruption of the natural gas industry. The decision rests on a profoundly mistaken view of the NGA and state sovereign immunity. The panel recognized, as it must, that no Eleventh Amendment problem exists if the federal government files the condemnation action. But the federal government can and has delegated its eminent domain authority to PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC (“PennEast”), and that delegation creates no constitutional difficulty. A condemnation action is not some separate in personam suit that threatens the state’s dignity or treasury. It is part and parcel of the federal eminent domain authority, which Congress delegated to certificate holders and guarantees states just compensation. Suggesting that this long-established arrangement raises Eleventh Amendment difficulties is profoundly wrong.

It is also profoundly consequential. The panel recognized its decision “may disrupt how the natural gas industry, which has used the NGA to construct interstate pipelines over State-owned land for the past eighty years, operates.” Op. 33-34. The panel suggested that disruption could be minimized if the federal government brings actions in its own name. But the panel never asked FERC about the feasibility of that alternative, or otherwise sought the views of that federal agency charged with interpreting and administering the NGA—whose authority this decision will seriously disrupt. Rehearing en banc is urgently warranted. At minimum, this Court should invite FERC to provide its views.

BACKGROUND

I. Congressional Delegation Of Eminent Domain Authority Under The NGA

It is well-established that “Congress in furtherance of its power to regulate commerce may delegate [its] power of eminent domain” to private corporations. Thatcher v. Tenn. Gas Transmission Co., 180 F.2d 644, 647 (5th Cir. 1950). The NGA is a prime example. Enacted to ensure “the orderly development of plentiful supplies of . . . natural gas at reasonable prices,” NAACP v. Fed. Power Comm’n, 425 U.S. 662, 670 (1976), the NGA requires a FERC-issued “certificate of public convenience and necessity” to construct or operate an interstate natural gas pipeline. 15 U.S.C. §717f(c)(1)(A).

But certification is just the first step. Linear infrastructure like pipelines cannot feasibly be built without eminent domain; otherwise, every landowner along the route could wield a veto. Thus, the NGA’s “full statutory scheme of [federal] control and regulation” could not “be made effective” without eminent domain. Thatcher, 180 F.2d at 647. Congress solved this problem through NGA Section 7(h), 15 U.S.C. §717f(h), entitled “[r]ight of eminent domain,” which grants certificate holders the authority to secure “the necessary right-of-way” for FERC-approved projects by “the exercise of . . . eminent domain in . . . district [or state] court.”

II. Procedural Background

The PennEast Project is a proposed natural gas pipeline extending from Pennsylvania to New Jersey. After FERC approved the Project and PennEast exhausted efforts to secure the route through voluntary landowner agreements, PennEast filed federal-court condemnation actions under Section 7(h). Various parties, including New Jersey, challenged PennEast’s FERC certificate in the D.C. Circuit.

In the New Jersey condemnation proceedings, the State asserted interests—overwhelmingly, non-possessory conservation easements, see N.J. Br. 8—in some parcels. In district court, New Jersey argued unsuccessfully that the Eleventh Amendment blocked the condemnation actions because PennEast, not the United States, was the plaintiff.

On appeal, New Jersey again invoked Eleventh Amendment immunity, but assured the panel its position would “not . . . [mean] PennEast is out of luck.” N.J. Br. 24. Sovereign immunity, the State claimed, would “not prevent the United States from condemning these same property interests . . . and transferring the interests to PennEast.” Id. And New Jersey asserted that “current federal law” “supplies th[e] necessary authorization” for such suits. N.J. Reply Br. 20-22. The State emphatically disclaimed “asking for a veto here, whether as a matter of intent or consequences”; rather, it was “just suggesting a different entity”—i.e., the federal government—“needs to file the [condemnation] action.” Oral Arg. Rec. at 11:50-12:07 (June 10, 2019).

The panel ruled in New Jersey’s favor. It concluded the actions could not proceed unless Congress delegated to PennEast both the federal “eminent domain power,” and the federal government’s “exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity”—which the panel viewed as “two separate powers.” Op. 15. While expressing “deep doubt that the United States can delegate its exemption from state sovereign immunity to private parties,” it ruled on statutory grounds. Op. 30. Applying the canon of constitutional avoidance and the rule that Congress’s “intent to abrogate state sovereign immunity must be unmistakably clear,” the panel concluded that Section 7(h) does not sufficiently indicate “that Congress intended” to delegate its sovereign-immunity exemption. Id. at 30-31 (quotation marks omitted).

“But our holding should not be misunderstood,” the panel cautioned. Op. 34. “Interstate gas pipelines c[ould] still proceed” under the “work-around” of having “accountable federal official[s] . . . file” condemnation actions. Id. The panel offered this reassuring view without having solicited or considered the views of those “accountable federal official[s].”

Ignoring its earlier representations to this Court that it did not seek a “veto,” New Jersey promptly informed the D.C. Circuit that the panel decision here creates “significant uncertainty regarding both the pipeline’s route and . . . continued feasibility,” and “render[s] [the] properties . . . off-limits.” Mot. to Hold Matter in Abeyance 5-6, Del. Riverkeeper Network v. FERC, No. 18-1128 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 23, 2019). The D.C. Circuit granted abeyance until “post-dispositional proceedings” in this case conclude, or “other action . . . resolves the obstacle” this Court’s decision poses. Order, Del. Riverkeeper Network v. FERC, No. 18-1128 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 1, 2019).

PennEast then asked FERC to issue a formal ruling interpreting Section 7(h). Pet’n for Declaratory Order, PennEast Pipeline Co., FERC Docket No. RP20-41 (Oct. 4, 2019), available at https://elibrary.ferc.gov/idmws/docket_search.asp. Among other things, PennEast invited FERC to confirm that Section 7(h) applies to state properties and Congress’s delegation of federal eminent domain authority necessarily brought with it immunity from Eleventh Amendment-based objections. FERC accepted the filing and set a comment deadline of October 18, 2019, emphasizing “the significance of the issues presented.” Notice of Pet’n, PennEast Pipeline Co., FERC Docket No. RP20-41 (Oct. 4, 2019).

ARGUMENT

I. Rehearing Is Warranted On This Question Of Exceptional National Importance Because The Panel Decision Jeopardizes FERC’s Orderly Administration Of The Natural Gas Pipeline Grid.

The panel’s decision was wrong, and will immediately disrupt the planning, construction, and operation of the Nation’s natural gas pipeline grid—a critical infrastructure resource on which hundreds of millions of individuals and businesses rely. The panel candidly acknowledged its “holding may disrupt how the natural gas industry” has operated “for the past eighty years.” Op. 33-34. The “exceptional importance” of the question justifies rehearing. Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(1)(B).

A. Congress Lawfully Delegated The Federal Government’s Eminent Domain Authority, Including Its Ability To Condemn State Property In Court.

The panel reached the wrong result by asking the wrong question. The principal question here is one of statutory interpretation: Does the NGA’s delegation of federal eminent domain authority include a delegation of the federal government’s ability to bring a lawsuit to condemn state-owned property? The panel instead focused on what it deemed a distinct question: Whether the Act delegates the federal government’s immunity from Eleventh Amendment-based objections. See Op. 14, 33. In so doing, the panel missed the crucial point that if Congress conferred the federal government’s undoubted authority to take state-owned property, it necessarily delegated the ability to effectuate that authority in court. Because eminent domain, by definition, is the power to force an exchange of property with a non-consenting landowner for just compensation, the “two . . . powers” the panel treated as “separate” (Op. 15) are actually inseparable.

1. The NGA Authorizes Certificate Holders To Condemn State-Owned Lands.

Section 7(h)’s language shows Congress authorized certificate holders to condemn state-owned lands. Section 7(h) does not provide a free-floating eminent domain power and then a separate private cause of action to enforce it. Rather, in one indivisible grant of authority, it provides that any FERC certificate holder “may . . . exercise . . . the right of eminent domain in [U.S.] district court” to acquire “the necessary right-of-way” for the pipeline. 15 U.S.C. §717f(h). This text makes no exception based on a property owner’s identity. And the federal government’s eminent domain authority, which Section 7(h) delegates, likewise makes no distinction between state and private land. Thus, if “the necessary right-of-way” crosses properties in which a state holds interests, those properties fall within Section 7(h).

Statutory context, purpose, and history confirm the point. The NGA originally contained no condemnation power. Project developers had to rely on state condemnation laws, which proved inadequate. Congress added Section 7(h) to overcome state-law barriers to construction of federally approved pipelines. See PennEast Br. 30-32; accord S. Rep. No. 80-429, at 3 (1947). Denying certificate holders the ability to acquire state-owned property along a FERC-certificated route would resurrect the very state veto authority Congress enacted Section 7(h) to eliminate.

Congress understood Section 7(h) would authorize certificate holders to condemn state-owned lands. An opponent criticized the legislation for “permit[ting] the taking of State-owned lands used for State purposes by a private company.” Amendments to the Natural Gas Act: Hearings on H.R. 2185, H.R. 2235, H.R. 2292, H.R. 2569, and H.R. 2956 Before the H. Comm. on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, 80th Cong. 611 (1947) (statement of John M. Crimmins). Committee members were unmoved by that concern, but no one doubted it was well-founded. Despite questioning the witness on other issues, see id. at 612-17, the committee never questioned the bill would grant certificate holders “the power to condemn property of a State,” id. at 614.

Section 7(h) was modeled after the eminent domain provision in the Federal Power Act (“FPA”), 16 U.S.C. §814. See S. Rep. No. 80-429, at 1. When Section 7(h) was enacted, the Commission understood that the “right of condemnation [under the FPA] may be exercised against property owned by the State.” In re Ala. Power Co., 2 F.P.C. 479, 495 & n.24 (1941). In borrowing language from the FPA—a statute interpreted in parallel with the NGA, see Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577 n.7 (1981)—Congress must have intended for Section 7(h) to grant similar authority. Conversely, when Congress intends to exempt state-owned lands, it says so. See 16 U.S.C. §814 (exempting land “owned by a State or political subdivision”); 16 U.S.C. §824p(e)(1) (same). Section 7(h) includes no such exception.

Finally, historical practice speaks volumes. For 72 years, certificate holders have repeatedly condemned state-owned property under Section 7(h), see Op. 33-34, including in New Jersey. See INGAA Amicus Br. 25-26. The practice went unchallenged not because dozens of states slept on their rights for decades, but because when a federal delegee is exercising federal eminent domain authority, there is no basis to assert state sovereign immunity.

2. Section 7(h) Delegates The Federal Government’s Eminent Domain Authority, Which Is Not Subject To State Sovereign Immunity Objections.

Because Section 7(h) broadly delegates the federal “right of eminent domain,” it necessarily brings with it the federal government’s ability to exercise that authority in court without Eleventh Amendment-based objections. It strains credulity to suggest, as the panel did, that Congress delegated a substantive right to acquire easements over state land, but left its delegees powerless to vindicate that right against non-consenting states.

Looking for a separate abrogation of state sovereign immunity was a mistaken inquiry. Having delegated federal eminent domain authority to be executed in court, there was no need to provide a separate cause of action or take any additional step.

The panel’s invocation of the constitutional-avoidance canon, see Op. 30-33, and the clear-statement rule for abrogations of state sovereign immunity, id. at 30, was thus misplaced. Section 7(h) does not abrogate state sovereign immunity; Congress delegated its own ability to institute federal-court condemnation actions against state-owned lands. And the avoidance canon is inapplicable because Congress’s delegation of federal eminent domain authority raises no “serious [constitutional] questions,” United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2332 n.6 (2019), given (among other things) that states lack immunity from federal eminent-domain actions, and in rem condemnation actions “do[] not implicate state sovereignty to nearly the same degree as other kinds of [lawsuits],” Cent. Va. Cmty. Coll. v. Katz, 546 U.S. 356, 378 (2006). See infra Part I.B. The text should be interpreted under ordinary statutory-construction principles.

3. Section 7(h) Is Constitutional As Applied To State Property.

The panel’s “doubt” that the federal government could constitutionally delegate to certificate holders the authority to condemn state-owned property via suit in federal court, Op. 30, is unwarranted. All agree the “federal government can exercise [its eminent domain] power to condemn State land in federal court.” Op. 15. And all agree the government can delegate eminent domain authority to private parties. See Cherokee Nation v. S. Kan. Ry., 135 U.S. 641, 657-68 (1890). Delegating that federal power necessarily empowers its exercise vis-à-vis state and private property alike, as any state immunities from the exercise of that federal power were surrendered in the plan of the Convention.

In concluding otherwise, the panel relied heavily on Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775 (1991). But Blatchford did not address whether the federal government could delegate its eminent domain authority. Instead, the Court found “no reason to believe that Congress ever contemplated” that a different statute—bearing no semblance to Section 7(h)—effected such a delegation of the federal government’s immunity from Eleventh Amendment objections. Id. at 785-86. Nor would effectuating the well-established practice of delegating federal eminent domain power to a limited universe of federally approved delegees invite the novel, historically unprecedented stratagems for skirting state sovereign immunity the panel hypothesized. Compare Op. 25 n.15, with infra pp. 14-15 (discussing unique nature of in rem condemnation suits).

B. Sovereign Immunity Does Not Apply To These In Rem Federal Condemnation Actions.

The in rem nature of NGA eminent domain actions confirms that Congress constitutionally can, and did, authorize certificate holders to file condemnation actions against state-owned property in federal court.

In rem jurisdiction “is premised on the res, not on the persona.” Tenn. Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440, 450 (2004). Thus, “[t]he effect of a judgment in [an in rem] case is limited to the property that supports jurisdiction and does not impose a personal liability on the property owner.” Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 199 (1977). In rem jurisdiction therefore “does not implicate States’ sovereignty to nearly the same degree as other kinds of jurisdiction,” Katz, 546 U.S. at 362, and states enjoy no “baseline rule of . . . total immunity” for “in rem actions.” Upper Skagit Indian Tribe v. Lundgren, 138 S. Ct. 1649, 1660-61 (2018) (Thomas, J., dissenting) (citation omitted); accord Regents of Univ. of Minn. v. LSI Corp., 926 F.3d 1327, 1343 (Fed. Cir. 2019) (additional views of Dyk, Wallach, and Hughes, JJ.).

The reasoning of Tennessee Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood virtually dictates a ruling in PennEast’s favor. Hood held that “a proceeding initiated by a debtor to determine the dischargeability of a student loan debt is not a suit against the State for purposes of the Eleventh Amendment,” obviating any need to decide whether Congress may “abrogate state sovereign immunity” under the Bankruptcy Clause. 541 U.S. at 443. In so holding, the Court relied almost exclusively on the fact that “[t]he discharge of a debt by a bankruptcy court is . . . an in rem proceeding,” id. at 447, observing that the Court has long “endorsed individualized determinations of States’ interests within the federal courts’ in rem jurisdiction,” id. at 450—most saliently in admiralty, see id. at 446-47, 451. Noting that “[a] debtor does not seek monetary damages or any affirmative relief from a State by seeking to discharge a debt,” the Court “s[aw] no reason why the exercise of the federal courts’ in rem bankruptcy jurisdiction is more threatening to state sovereignty than the exercise of their in rem admiralty jurisdiction.” Id. at 450-51.

The inapplicability of state sovereign immunity to NGA condemnation actions by private companies follows a fortiori from Hood. Like “[t]he discharge of a debt by a bankruptcy court,” Hood, 541 U.S. at 447, a “condemnation proceeding is . . . in rem,” i.e., “not a taking of rights of persons in the ordinary sense but an appropriation of the land or property itself.” United States v. 6.45 Acres of Land, 409 F.3d 139, 145-46 (3d Cir. 2005) (citations omitted). Like a bankruptcy court, a condemnation court “is able to provide”—indeed, must provide—full relief “against the world,” even if some interest-holders do not participate. Hood, 541 U.S. at 447-49 (citation omitted).

Like a debtor seeking discharge of state-held debts in bankruptcy, a condemnor of state land “does not seek monetary damages or any affirmative relief from [the] State.” Hood, 541 U.S. at 450. The condemnor simply seeks title to the land.¹ Indeed, unlike bankruptcy proceedings (or in rem admiralty actions), condemnation actions do not even indirectly threaten “the financial integrity of the States,” Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 750 (1999): the condemnor “must afford the owner just compensation,” providing a “unique safeguard.” Presley v. City of ¹ Under Hood, it is “irrelevant” that PennEast, per Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 71.1, named state entities as defendants. 541 U.S. at 451-54.

Charlottesville, 464 F.3d 480, 489 (4th Cir. 2006). Any differences between this case and past precedents actually support PennEast, establishing that NGA condemnation actions are less “threatening to state sovereignty” than the other in rem proceedings where the Supreme Court has found sovereign immunity inapplicable.²

The panel dismissed these authorities as limited to the “specialized areas” of “bankruptcy and admiralty law.” Op. 27. But that rationale repeats, nearly verbatim, an argument Hood specifically rejected. The Court reasoned it was appropriate to extend in rem admiralty precedents because “[a]lthough both bankruptcy and admiralty are specialized areas of the law,” there was “no reason why the exercise of the federal courts’ in rem bankruptcy jurisdiction is more threatening to state sovereignty than the exercise of their in rem admiralty jurisdiction.” 541 U.S. at 451. As explained above, jurisdiction over NGA condemnation actions is less threatening to state sovereignty than in rem bankruptcy and admiralty proceedings.

C. The Question Presented Is Exceptionally Important.

The question’s importance cannot be overstated. This Court has territorial jurisdiction over one of the Nation’s most prolific natural-gas-producing regions, and numerous FERC-jurisdictional projects are proposed or under development here. Virtually every significant natural gas pipeline must traverse state-owned lands, if only to cross navigable waterbodies that crisscross the country and often form state boundaries. Cf. Idaho v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Idaho, 521 U.S. 261, 283 (1997). No state could enact a valid statute blocking federal pipelines, and they should not be able to accomplish the same by invoking sovereign immunity. Moreover, if sovereign immunity can be invoked to block NGA condemnation actions, not only will states exercise a veto, but so will individual landowners through the simple expedient of granting minor property interests to a state. This is not mere speculation; similar strategies are well-known.³ Landowners will disrupt FERC's process for reviewing and approving pipeline routes by creating an endless loop of proposed routes, modifications, and transfers to the state of blocking property interests.

² The panel distinguished the admiralty caselaw on grounds that “[s]tates can assert their sovereign immunity in in rem admiralty proceedings, when the State possesses the res.” Op. 27 n.17. But that does not distinguish bankruptcy, nor the many parcels where New Jersey claims only non-possessory conservation easements.

The panel's speculation about a "work-around" with federal officials filing condemnation actions only highlights its failure to solicit FERC's views. The panel acknowledged new legislation might be required, Op. 34, and never acknowledged other typical "[r]equirements" for federal-agency condemnations, e.g., "[a]ppropriated funding." Anatomy of a Condemnation Case, U.S. Dep't of Justice, ³ See, e.g., Nancy A. McLaughlin, Condemning Open Space: Making Way for National Interest Electric Transmission Corridors (or Not), 26 Va. Env'tl. L.J. 399, 405 (2008).

<https://bit.ly/2mNBIOR> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019). Neither FERC nor any other federal agency has the resources to prosecute condemnation actions timely whenever states assert sovereign immunity. Despite its prior representations in this Court, New Jersey’s recent filings show that it believes it was handed a veto, not a mere speed-bump subject to “work-arounds.”

II. At Bare Minimum, The Court Should Invite FERC’s Views.

At minimum, this Court should invite FERC to provide its views. The panel decision threatens to irrevocably undermine FERC’s ability to review, approve, and site interstate natural gas pipelines, and to ensure, as Congress directed, the continued availability of natural gas at reasonable prices.

Yet because FERC was not a party, the panel adjudicated novel questions about Section 7(h) and raised what it perceived as serious questions about its constitutionality, without input from the expert agency administering the statute or the Justice Department. See Myersville Citizens for a Rural Cmty. v. FERC, 783 F.3d 1301, 1315 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (FERC’s interpretation of NGA receives Chevron deference); cf. 28 U.S.C. §2403(a) (requiring notification of Attorney General when constitutionality of federal statute “is drawn in question”). FERC’s authoritative perspective on these questions would be invaluable, and should be forthcoming shortly. FERC already formally noticed PennEast’s declaratory-order petition and set a prompt deadline for comments, emphasizing “the significance of the issues.”

See supra p. 6. This Court should invite FERC to file a brief explaining its views and whether rehearing is needed. The Supreme Court’s recent grant of two petitions for certiorari, one by the federal government, underscores the nationwide importance of pipeline issues. See U.S. Forest Serv. v. Cowpasture River Pres. Ass’n, cert. granted, No. 18-1584 (U.S. Oct. 4, 2019).

This Court should not invoke constitutional concerns to work a sea change in 70 years of settled NGA practice—undermining a major federal statute FERC has administered since its inception—without considering the federal government’s views.

CONCLUSION

The Court should invite FERC to provide its views on the questions presented, and should grant rehearing en banc.

Date: October 22, 2019

Respectfully submitted,

Paul D. Clement
Erin E. Murphy
Kasdin Miller Mitchell
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
1301 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20004
Phone: 202.389.5000
Email: paul.clement@kirkland.com
Email: erin.murphy@kirkland.com
Email: kasdin.mitchell@kirkland.com

James M. Graziano, Esquire
Archer & Greiner, P.C.
One Centennial Square
33 E. Euclid Avenue
Haddonfield, NJ 08033
Phone: 856.795.2121
Email: jgraziano@archerlaw.com

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell
Michael B. Wigmore
Jeremy C. Marwell (D.C. Bar No. 1000299)
Matthew X. Etchemendy
Vinson & Elkins LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 500 West
Washington, DC 20037
Phone: 202.639.6507
Email: mwigmore@velaw.com
Email: jmarwell@velaw.com
Email: metchemendy@velaw.com

Counsel for Appellee PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

CERTIFICATE OF BAR MEMBERSHIP, PRIVACY REDACTIONS, AND IDENTICAL ELECTRONIC AND HARD COPY VERSIONS

I hereby certify that the signatory to this petition, Jeremy C. Marwell, is a member of the bar of this Court. I further certify that no privacy redactions were necessary for this filing. No paper copies are required for this filing.

Dated: October 22, 2019

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell

Jeremy C. Marwell
Vinson & Elkins LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 500 West
Washington, DC 20037
Phone: 202.639.6507
Email: jmarwell@velaw.com

Counsel for PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

CERTIFICATE OF VIRUS SCAN

I hereby certify that the PDF version of this document has been scanned for viruses using Sophos Anti-Virus and is virus-free.

Dated: October 22, 2019

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell

Jeremy C. Marwell
Vinson & Elkins LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 500 West
Washington, DC 20037
Phone: 202.639.6507
Email: jmarwell@velaw.com

Counsel for PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

1. This rehearing petition complies with the type-volume limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(2) and 40(b) because it contains 3,888 words, excluding the parts exempted by Fed. R. App. P. 32(f).

2. This rehearing petition complies with the typeface requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(5) and the type-style requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(6), because it has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 2016 in Times New Roman 14-point font.

Dated: October 22, 2019

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell

Jeremy C. Marwell

Vinson & Elkins LLP

2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW

Suite 500 West

Washington, DC 20037

Phone: 202.639.6507

Email: jmarwell@velaw.com

Counsel for PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

Pursuant to Rule 25 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, I hereby certify that, on October 22, 2019, I electronically filed the foregoing Appellee PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC's Petition for Panel Rehearing or Rehearing En Banc with the Clerk of the Court for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by using the appellate CM/ECF system, and served copies of the foregoing via the Court's CM/ECF system on all ECF-registered counsel. I further certify that I caused the same Petition to be served via U.S. Mail upon pro se defendants who have entered an appearance.

/s/ Jeremy C. Marwell

Jeremy C. Marwell
Vinson & Elkins LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 500 West
Washington, DC 20037
Phone: 202.639.6507
Email: jmarwell@velaw.com

Counsel for PennEast Pipeline Company, LLC

EXHIBIT A

PRECEDENTIAL

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

Nos. 19-1191 thru 19-1232

In re: PENNEAST PIPELINE COMPANY, LLC

STATE OF NEW JERSEY; NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT
OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION; NEW JERSEY
STATE AGRICULTURE DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE;
DELAWARE & RARITAN CANAL COMMISSION; NEW JERSEY WATER SUPPLY AUTHORITY; NEW JERSEY
DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION; NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY; NEW JERSEY MOTOR VEHICLE COMMISSION,
Appellants

On Appeal from the United States District Court
for the District of New Jersey
(D.C. Nos. 3-18-cv-01597, 3-18-cv-01603, 3-18-cv-01638,
3-18-cv-01643, 3-18-cv-01668, 3-18-cv-01669,
3-18-cv-01670 3-18-cv-01672, 3-18-cv-01673,
3-18-cv-01682, 3-18-cv-01684, 3-18-cv-01689,
3-18-cv-01699, 3-18-cv-01701, 3-18-cv-01709,
3-18-cv-01721, 3-18-cv-01743, 3-18-cv-01754,
3-18-cv-01756, 3-18-cv-01774, 3-18-cv-01778,
3-18-cv-01801, 3-18-cv-01806,
3-18-cv-01845, 3-18-cv-01851, 3-18-cv-01855,

3-18-cv-01859, 3-18-cv-01863, 3-18-cv-01869,
3-18-cv-01874, 3-18-cv-01896, 3-18-cv-01905,
3-18-cv-01938, 3-18-cv-01942, 3-18-cv-01973,
3-18-cv-01974, 3-18-cv-01976, 3-18-cv-01990,
3-18-cv-01995, 3-18-cv-02001, 3-18-cv-02003 and
3-18-cv-02014)

District Judge: Hon. Brian R. Martinotti

Argued
June 10, 2019

Before: JORDAN, BIBAS, and NYGAARD, Circuit Judges.

(Filed: September 10, 2019)

Mark A. Collier
Jeremy Feigenbaum [ARGUED]
Office of Attorney General of New Jersey
Division of Criminal Justice
25 Market Street
Richard J. Hughes Justice Complex
Trenton, NJ 08625
*Counsel for Appellants, State of New Jersey,
New Jersey Dept. of Environmental Protection,
New Jersey State Agriculture Dev. Committee,
New Jersey Motor Vehicle Commission,
Delaware & Raritan Canal Commission,
New Jersey Water Supply Authority,
New Jersey Department of Transportation,
New Jersey Department of Treasury,*

Jennifer Selendy
Selendy & Gay
1290 Avenue of the Americas – 17th Floor
New York, NY 10104
Counsel for Amicus Appellant Niskanen Center

Marueen T. Coghlan
James M. Graziano [ARGUED]
Archer & Greiner
One Centennial Square
33 East Euclid Avenue
Haddonfield, NJ 08033
Counsel for Appellee PennEast Pipeline Co, LLC

Lela Hollabaugh
Bradley Arant Boult Cummings
1600 Division Street – Suite 700
Nashville, TN 37203

Anna M. Manasco
Bradley Arant Boult Cummings
1819 Fifth Avenue North
One Federal Place
Birmingham AL 35203
*Counsel for Amicus Appellees
Interstate Natural Gas Association of America,
American Petroleum Institute, Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America,
National Association of Manufacturers*

OPINION OF THE COURT

JORDAN, Circuit Judge.

The Natural Gas Act (“NGA”), 15 U.S.C. §§ 717–717z, allows private gas companies to exercise the federal government’s power to take property by eminent domain, provided certain jurisdictional requirements are met. This appeal calls on us to decide whether that delegation of power allows gas companies to hale unconsenting States into federal court to condemn State property interests.

PennEast Pipeline Company (“PennEast”) is scheduled to build a pipeline through Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The company obtained federal approval for the project and promptly sued pursuant to the NGA to condemn and gain immediate access to properties along the pipeline route. Forty-two of those properties are owned, at least in part, by the State of New Jersey or various arms of the State. New Jersey sought dismissal of PennEast’s condemnation suits for lack of jurisdiction, citing the Eleventh Amendment to the United States Constitution, and, separately, arguing that PennEast failed to satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the NGA. Broadly speaking, the Eleventh Amendment recognizes that States enjoy sovereign immunity from suits by private parties in federal court. New Jersey has not consented to PennEast’s condemnation suits, so those legal proceedings can go forward only if they are not barred by the State’s immunity. The District Court held that they are not barred and granted PennEast orders of condemnation and preliminary injunctive relief for immediate access to the properties. New Jersey has appealed.

We will vacate because New Jersey's sovereign immunity has not been abrogated by the NGA, nor has there been – as PennEast argues – a delegation of the federal government's exemption from the State's sovereign immunity. The federal government's power of eminent domain and its power to hale sovereign States into federal court are separate and distinct. In the NGA, Congress has delegated the former. Whether the federal government can delegate its power to override a State's Eleventh Amendment immunity is, however, another matter entirely. While there is reason to doubt that, we need not answer that question definitively since, even if a delegation of that sort could properly be made, nothing in the text of the NGA suggests that Congress intended the statute to have such a result. PennEast's condemnation suits are thus barred by the State's Eleventh Amendment immunity. We will therefore vacate the District Court's order with respect to New Jersey's property interests and remand the matter for the dismissal of any claims against New Jersey.

I. BACKGROUND

The NGA authorizes private gas companies to acquire “necessary right[s]-of-way” for their pipelines “by the exercise of the right of eminent domain[,]” if three conditions are met. 15 U.S.C. § 717f(h). First, the gas company seeking to condemn property must have obtained a Certificate of Public Convenience and Necessity (a “Certificate”) from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (“FERC”). Id. Second, it must show that it was unable to “acquire [the property] by contract” or “agree with the owner of property” about the amount to be paid. Id. Third and finally, the value of the property condemned must exceed $3,000. Id.

In the fall of 2015, PennEast applied for a Certificate for its proposed 116-mile pipeline running from Luzerne County, Pennsylvania to Mercer County, New Jersey (the “project”). After a multi-year review,¹ FERC granted PennEast’s application and issued a Certificate for the project, concluding that, so long as PennEast met certain conditions, “the public convenience and necessity require[d] approval of PennEast’s proposal[.]”² (App. at 226.)

¹ That review unfolded as follows: In February 2015, FERC published notice in the Federal Register and mailed it to some 4,300 interested parties. FERC received over 6,000 written comments in response and heard from 250 speakers at three public meetings. The following summer, FERC issued a draft Environmental Impact Statement (“EIS”) for the project. It also published notice in the Federal Register and mailed the draft EIS to over 4,280 interested parties. In response, FERC received more than 4,100 letters and heard from 420 (out of 670) attendees at six public meetings.

To address environmental and engineering concerns raised by the public, PennEast filed 33 route modifications. FERC then provided notice to newly affected landowners. The following spring, FERC published a final EIS in the Federal Register. That final EIS sought to address all substantive comments on the draft EIS. FERC concluded that nearly all New Jersey parcels “subject to types of conservation or open space protective easements will generally retain their conservation and open space characteristics[.]” (App. at 268.)

² Multiple parties, including New Jersey, challenged FERC’s decision in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Petition for Review, Delaware Riverkeeper Network v. FERC, No. 18-1128 (D.C. Cir. filed

Certificate in hand, PennEast filed verified complaints in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, asking for orders of condemnation for 131 properties along the pipeline route, determinations of just compensation for those properties, and preliminary and permanent injunctive relief to gain immediate access to and possession of the properties to begin construction of its pipeline. Forty-two of the 131 property interests PennEast sought to condemn belong to New Jersey or arms of the State (collectively, the “State” or “New Jersey”).³ The State holds possessory interests in two of the properties and non-possessory interests – most often,

May 9, 2018). That petition remains pending. Several property owners also petitioned FERC for rehearing. Those petitions were all “rejected, dismissed, or denied[.]” (App. at 31.)

³ This appeal was filed on behalf of the State of New Jersey, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (“NJDEP”), the State Agriculture Development Committee (“SADC”), the Delaware & Raritan Canal Commission (“DRCC”), the New Jersey Department of the Treasury, the New Jersey Department of Transportation, the New Jersey Water Supply Authority, and the New Jersey Motor Vehicle Commission. It is undisputed that those various entities are arms of the State, and PennEast does not suggest that any of those entities should have anything less than Eleventh Amendment immunity to the same extent as the State of New Jersey.

easements requiring that the land be preserved for recreational, conservation, or agricultural use – in the rest.⁴

After PennEast filed its complaints, the District Court ordered the affected property owners to show cause why the Court should not grant the relief sought.⁵ New Jersey filed a ⁴ New Jersey owns those property interests as part its attempt to preserve farmland and open space in the State. Cf. N.J. Const. art. VIII, § 2 ¶¶ 6-7 (setting aside tax dollars for open space and farmland preservation). For decades now, the State has operated preservation programs aimed at preserving such land. For example, NJDEP’s “Green Acres” program authorizes the State to purchase, and help local governments purchase, land for recreation and conservation. N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 13:8A-1 to -56. New Jersey’s Agriculture Retention and Development Act also empowers the SADC to preserve farmland by buying such land in fee simple or by buying development easements to preserve the land for agricultural uses. Id. §§ 4:1C-11 to -48. The State also owns and maintains easements along the Delaware Canal through DRCC to protect the State’s water quality and vegetation. Id. §§ 13:13A-1 to -15; N.J. Admin. Code § 7:45-9.3.

The State has spent over a billion dollars on its preservation efforts. As of 2017, New Jersey had “helped to preserve over 650,000 acres of land[,]” and the “SADC and its partners had preserved over 2,500 farms and over 200,000 acres of farmland.” (Opening Br. at 6 (citing App. at 94, 108).)

⁵ The defendants include the State, as well as various townships, property trusts, utility companies, and individual property owners.

brief invoking its Eleventh Amendment immunity and arguing for dismissal of the complaints against it. It also argued that PennEast had failed to satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the NGA by not attempting to contract with the State for its property interests.

After hearings on the show-cause order,⁶ the District Court granted PennEast's application for orders of condemnation and for preliminary injunctive relief. At the outset, the Court rejected New Jersey's assertion of Eleventh Amendment immunity. It found that "PennEast ha[d] been vested with the federal government's eminent domain powers and stands in the shoes of the sovereign[,] making Eleventh Amendment immunity inapplicable. (App. at 33.) The Court reasoned that, because "the NGA expressly allows 'any holder of a certificate of public convenience and necessity'" to condemn property, PennEast could do so here – even for property owned by the State. (App. at 33 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 717f(h)).)

Next, the Court held that PennEast met the three requirements of the NGA, entitling it to exercise the federal government's eminent domain power. First, it found that PennEast holds a valid Certificate for the project. Next, it concluded that PennEast had been unable to “acquire by contract, or [was] unable to agree with the owner of property to the compensation to be paid for” the affected properties. (App. at 48 (alteration in original) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 717f(h)).) On that point, the Court rejected the State’s contention that PennEast had to negotiate with the holders of all property interests, including easement holders. In the District Court’s view, § 717f(h) refers only to the “owner of [the] property[,]” meaning the owner of the possessory interest. (App. at 48 n.49.) Finally, the Court found that the statute’s property value requirement was satisfied because PennEast had extended offers exceeding $3,000 for each property. The Court thus granted PennEast’s request for orders of condemnation.

⁶ The Court held three hearings to accommodate the large number of defendants involved. Each hearing "generally proceeded the same way: First, PennEast was permitted to address the Court, followed by [property owners] represented by counsel. Next, any property owner in attendance was permitted to address the Court, giving first priority to any party who had filed an opposition. PennEast was permitted to respond." (App. at 29.)

The District Court went on to hold that PennEast had satisfied the familiar four-factor test for preliminary injunctive relief. To obtain a preliminary injunction, the movant must show “1) that there is reasonable probability of success on the merits, 2) that there will be irreparable harm to the movant in the absence of relief, 3) that granting the injunction will not result in greater harm to the nonmoving party, and 4) that the public interest favors granting the injunction.” Transcon. Gas Pipe Line Co. v. Conestoga Twp., 907 F.3d 725, 732 (3d Cir. 2018). As to the first factor, the Court said that PennEast had already effectively succeeded on the merits, given that “the Court ha[d] found PennEast satisfied the elements of § 717f(h) and is therefore entitled to condemnation orders.” (App. at 50.) As to the second factor, the Court found that, without an injunction, PennEast would suffer irreparable harm in the form of non-recoupable financial losses and construction delays. For the third factor, the Court noted that, while it had “carefully considered a wide range of arguments from Defendants regarding the harm PennEast’s possession will cause,” the property owners would not be harmed “by the Court granting immediate possession” because they would receive just compensation. (App. at 53, 55.) Lastly, the Court was persuaded, especially in light of FERC’s conclusion about public necessity, that the project is in the public interest. Having found all four factors weighed in favor of granting a preliminary injunction, the Court ordered that relief.⁷ It then appointed five individuals to serve as special masters and condemnation commissioners to determine just compensation awards.

New Jersey moved for reconsideration of the District Court’s denial of sovereign immunity and sought a stay of the District Court’s order to prevent PennEast from taking immediate possession of the State’s properties. As described more fully herein, see infra Part III–B.1., it argued that, based on the Supreme Court’s decision in Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775 (1991), the United States lacks the constitutional authority to delegate to private entities like PennEast the capacity to sue a State. The District Court denied that motion, concluding that Blatchford does not apply to condemnation actions brought pursuant to the NGA.

The State timely appealed. It also moved to stay the District Court’s order pending resolution of this appeal and to expedite our consideration of the dispute. We granted that motion in part, preventing construction of the pipeline and expediting the appeal.

⁷ In addition to allowing PennEast to take immediate possession of the properties, the Court ordered that the U.S. Marshals could investigate, arrest, imprison, or bring to Court any property owner who violated the Court’s order.

II. JURISDICTION AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

New Jersey contests jurisdiction in these condemnation actions, asserting here, as it did in the District Court, its sovereign immunity. For the reasons that follow, we agree with it that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the suits insofar as they implicated the State's property interests. We, however, have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 to review the denial of New Jersey's claim of Eleventh Amendment immunity. Puerto Rico Aqueduct & Sewer Auth. v. Metcalf & Eddy, Inc., 506 U.S. 139, 147 (1993); see Cooper v. Se. Pa. Transp. Auth., 548 F.3d 296, 298 (3d Cir. 2008) ("An order denying Eleventh Amendment immunity is immediately appealable as a final order under the collateral order doctrine."). And, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1), we have jurisdiction to review the grant of an injunction.

We exercise plenary review over a claim of sovereign immunity. Karns v. Shanahan, 879 F.3d 504, 512 (3d Cir. 2018). We review the grant of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion but review de novo the legal conclusions underlying the grant. McNeil Nutritionals, LLC v. Heartland Sweeteners, LLC, 511 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2007).

III. DISCUSSION

The Eleventh Amendment declares that:

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

U.S. Const. amend. XI. The States' immunity from suit in federal court, however, "neither derives from, nor is limited by, the terms of the Eleventh Amendment." Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 713 (1999). Rather, that immunity is "a fundamental aspect of the sovereignty which the States enjoyed before the ratification of the Constitution, and which they retain today[.]"⁸ Id. The Eleventh Amendment thus embodies a "recognition that the States, although a union, maintain certain attributes of sovereignty, including sovereign immunity." Puerto Rico Aqueduct, 506 U.S. at 146.

Because of that immunity, States are not "subject to suit in federal court unless" they have consented to suit, "either expressly or in the 'plan of the convention.'" ⁹ Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 779 (quoting Port Auth. Trans-Hudson Corp. v. Feeney, 495 U.S. 299, 310 (1990)). As part of "the 'plan of the ⁸ State sovereign immunity "includes both immunity from suit in federal court and immunity from liability[.]" Lombardo v. Pa., Dep't of Pub. Welfare, 540 F.3d 190, 193 (3d Cir. 2008). Immunity from suit in federal court is known by the shorthand "Eleventh Amendment immunity." Id. That is the only type of State sovereign immunity at issue here.

⁹ That immunity extends to agents and instrumentalities of the State. Regents of the Univ. of Cal. v. Doe, 519 U.S. 425, 429 (1997); Maliandi v. Montclair State Univ., 845 F.3d 77, 83 (3d Cir. 2016).

[Constitutional] convention[,]” the States consented to suit by the federal government in federal court. Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 779-82; see United States v. Texas, 143 U.S. 621, 641-46 (1892); City of Newark v. United States, 254 F.2d 93, 96 (3d Cir. 1958) (“The consent of states to suits by the United States is implied as inherent in the federal plan.”). The federal government thus enjoys an exemption from the power of the States to fend off suit by virtue of their sovereign immunity, an exemption that private parties do not generally have.¹⁰ Alden, 527 U.S. at 755.

New Jersey asserts that it is entitled to sovereign immunity from these condemnation suits. It argues that the federal government cannot delegate its exemption from state sovereign immunity to private parties like PennEast and that, even if it could, the NGA is not a clear and unequivocal delegation of that exemption. PennEast disagrees. The company argues that a delegation of the federal government’s eminent domain power under the NGA necessarily includes the ability to sue the States and that concluding otherwise would frustrate the fundamental purpose of the NGA to facilitate interstate pipelines.

A

¹⁰ Citizens can, however, file suit against a State’s officers where the litigation seeks only prospective injunctive relief based on an ongoing constitutional violation. Will v. Mich. Dep’t of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 70-71 (1989); Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908). No one suggests that that doctrine of Ex parte Young is applicable here.

In view of PennEast’s argument, it is essential at the outset to distinguish between the two powers at issue here: the federal government’s eminent domain power and its exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity. Eminent domain is the power of a sovereign to condemn property for its own use. Kohl v. United States, 91 U.S. 367, 371, 373-74 (1875). The federal government can exercise that power to condemn State land in federal court. United States v. Carmack, 329 U.S. 230, 240 (1946). But its ability to do so is not due simply to “the supreme sovereign’s right to condemn state land. Rather, it is because the federal government enjoys a special exemption from the Eleventh Amendment.” Sabine Pipe Line, LLC v. Orange Cty., Tex., 327 F.R.D. 131, 140 (E.D. Tex. 2017). Thus, the federal government’s ability to condemn State land – what PennEast contends it is entitled to do by being vested with the federal government’s eminent domain power – is, in fact, the function of two separate powers: the government’s eminent domain power and its exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity. A delegation of the former must not be confused for, or conflated with, a delegation of the latter. A private party is not endowed with all the rights of the United States by virtue of a delegation of the government’s power of eminent domain.

PennEast tries to ignore that distinction, arguing that Congress intended for private gas companies to which the federal government’s eminent domain power has been delegated under the NGA to be able to condemn State property. Focusing on Congress’s intent to enable gas companies to build interstate gas pipelines, PennEast fails to adequately grapple with the constitutional impediment to allowing a private business to condemn State land: namely, Eleventh Amendment immunity.

That failure is a consequence of the easier road PennEast chooses, namely citing the NGA and asserting, in effect, that Congress must have meant for pipeline construction to go forward, regardless of the Eleventh Amendment. That approach has the advantage of avoiding the difficulty of facing up to what the law requires to overcome Eleventh Amendment immunity. As discussed below, see infra Part III–B.3., Congress cannot abrogate state sovereign immunity under the Commerce Clause, Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 59, 72–73 (1996), and because Congress enacted the NGA pursuant to that Clause, the statute cannot be a valid congressional abrogation of sovereign immunity. To maintain these suits, then, PennEast had to offer a different answer for why its suits do not offend New Jersey’s sovereign immunity. But, as just noted, the only reason it gives – an argument of implied delegation of the federal government’s Eleventh Amendment exemption under the NGA – ignores rather than confronts the distinction between the federal government’s eminent domain power and its exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity. Unfortunately for PennEast, that distinction is essential, and there are powerful reasons to doubt the delegability of the federal government’s exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity.

B

Three reasons prompt our doubt that the United States can delegate that exemption to private parties. First, there is simply no support in the caselaw for PennEast’s “delegation” theory of sovereign immunity. Second, fundamental differences between suits brought by accountable federal agents and those brought by private parties militate against concluding that the federal government can delegate to private parties its ability to sue the States. Finally, endorsing the delegation theory would undermine the careful limits established by the Supreme Court on the abrogation of State sovereign immunity.

1

Looking in more detail at the caselaw, it lends no credence to the notion that the United States can delegate the federal government's exemption from state sovereign immunity. In Blatchford, the Supreme Court dealt with this issue. In that case, Native American tribes sued an Alaskan official for money allegedly owed to them under a state revenue-sharing statute. Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 777-78. Relevant here, the tribes argued that their suit did not offend state sovereign immunity because Congress had delegated to the tribes the federal government's ability to sue the States. See id. at 783 (explaining the tribes' assertion that, in passing 28 U.S.C. § 1362, which grants district courts jurisdiction over suits brought by Indian tribes arising under federal law, Congress had "delegate[d]" the federal government's authority to sue on behalf of Indian tribes "back to [the] tribes themselves").

The Court rejected that argument, expressing its "doubt ... that sovereign exemption can be delegated—even if one limits the permissibility of delegation ... to persons on whose behalf the United States itself might sue." Id. at 785. The Court explained why: "[t]he consent, 'inherent in the convention,' to suit by the United States—at the instance and under the control of responsible federal officers—is not consent to suit by anyone whom the United States might select[.]” Id. The delegation theory, the Court explained, was nothing more than “a creature of [the tribes’] own invention.” Id. at 786.

PennEast would have us dismiss Blatchford as “so distinguishable” as to be “useless by analogy.” (Answering Br. at 41.) As PennEast sees it, the statute at issue in Blatchford was a jurisdictional statute that did not confer any substantive rights on the tribes, while the NGA confers the substantive power of eminent domain on private parties. But the Supreme Court’s statements in Blatchford had nothing to do with the jurisdictional nature of the statute at issue and everything to do with the Court’s deep doubt about the “delegation” theory itself.

Courts of Appeals have been similarly skeptical that the federal government can delegate to private parties its exemption from state sovereign immunity – even when the private party seeks to assert the interests of the United States, rather than the party’s own. The D.C. Circuit’s decision in U.S. ex rel. Long v. SCS Business & Technical Institute, Inc., 173 F.3d 870 (D.C. Cir. 1999), is a case in point. There, the court stated that “permitting a qui tam relator to sue a state in federal court based on the government’s exemption from the Eleventh Amendment bar involves just the kind of delegation that Blatchford so plainly questioned.” Id. at 882. That conclusion accords with others from our sister circuits. See United States ex rel. Foulds v. Tex. Tech Univ., 171 F.3d 279, 294 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding, in the qui tam context, that “the United States cannot delegate to non-designated, private individuals its sovereign ability to evade the prohibitions of the Eleventh Amendment”); see also Jachetta v. United States, 653 F.3d 898, 912 (9th Cir. 2011) (rejecting argument that the federal government could authorize a private plaintiff to sue on its behalf as “unpersuasive” based on Blatchford). But cf. United States ex rel. Milam v. Univ. of Tex. M.D. Anderson Cancer Ctr., 961 F.2d 46, 50 (4th Cir. 1992) (concluding that “the United States is the real party in interest” in qui tam suits and therefore such suits are not barred by the States’ Eleventh Amendment immunity).

While the Supreme Court and federal Courts of Appeals have not addressed the precise issue that we have here – whether condemnation actions under the NGA are barred by Eleventh Amendment immunity – the one reported district court decision to do so held that Eleventh Amendment immunity is indeed a bar. In Sabine Pipe Line, LLC v. Orange, County, Texas, the pipeline company plaintiff argued that, because the federal government could exercise its eminent domain power to condemn State property, there was “no reason to treat a delegation of the same authority any differently.” 327 F.R.D. at 139. The court disagreed. It explained that, like PennEast’s arguments, the plaintiff’s “theory of the case erroneously assumes that by delegating one power [, that of eminent domain], the government necessarily also delegated the other [, the ability to sue the States].” Id. at 140. The court was careful not to conflate the two powers and, based on Blatchford, concluded that “a private party does not become the sovereign such that it enjoys all the rights held by the United States by virtue of Congress’s delegation of eminent domain powers.” Id. at 141.”¹¹ Id.

¹¹ PennEast is, of course, at pains to distinguish Sabine. It notes that the property at issue in Sabine had been privately owned at the time of the project’s approval and only later transferred to the State of Texas. Thus, it argues, FERC’s

We are in full agreement. Quite simply, there is no authority for PennEast’s delegation theory of sovereign immunity. Indeed, the caselaw strongly suggests that New Jersey is correct that the federal government cannot delegate to private parties its exemption from state sovereign immunity.

2

Non-delegability makes sense, since there are meaningful differences between suits brought by the United States, an accountable sovereign, and suits by private citizens. Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 785. Suits brought by the United States are “commenced and prosecuted ... by those who are entrusted with the constitutional duty to ‘take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed[.]’” Alden, 527 U.S. at 755 (quoting U.S. Const., art. II, § 3). Private parties face no similar obligation. Nor are they accountable in the way federal officials are. See id. at 756 (“Suits brought by the United States itself require the exercise of political responsibility for each suit prosecuted against a State, a control which is absent from a broad delegation to private persons to sue nonconsenting States.”).

Those considerations are clearly in play in the eminent domain context. There, the condemning party controls the predecessor was not aware that it was approving a project that implicated State-owned land and that the State opposed. Moreover, it asserts, the Sabine court did not consider the arguments pressed here. But those arguments are unresponsive to the fundamental concern: whether the federal government can delegate its immunity exemption at all.

timing of the condemnation actions, decides whether to seek immediate access to the land, and maintains control over the action through the just compensation phase, determining whether to settle and at what price. The incentives for the United States, a sovereign that acts under a duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and is accountable to the populace, may be very different than those faced by a private, for-profit entity like PennEast, especially in dealing with a sovereign State. In other words, the identity of the party filing the condemnation action is not insignificant.

3

There is, however, a way that Congress can subject the States to suits by private parties. It can abrogate the sovereign immunity of the States. The Supreme Court “ha[s] stressed, however, that abrogation of sovereign immunity upsets the fundamental constitutional balance between the Federal Government and the States, placing a considerable strain on the principles of federalism that inform Eleventh Amendment doctrine[.]” Dellmuth v. Muth, 491 U.S. 223, 227 (1989) (alterations, internal quotation marks, and citations omitted). Accordingly, the Court has held that Congress can abrogate the sovereign immunity of the States “only by making its intention [to do so] unmistakably clear in the language of the statute” in question.¹² Id. at 228 (quoting Atascadero State Hosp. v.

¹² The same kind of clarity is demanded for waivers of sovereign immunity. See Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 238 n.1 (1985) (“[W]e require an unequivocal indication that the State intends to consent to federal jurisdiction that otherwise would be barred by the Eleventh Amendment. As we said in Edelman v. Jordan, ‘[c]onstructive Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 242 (1985)). “Unmistakable” clarity is a high bar, and one that must be cleared without resort to nontextual arguments. See Atascadero, 473 U.S. at 246 (“A general authorization for suit in federal court is not the kind of unequivocal statutory language sufficient to abrogate the Eleventh Amendment. When Congress chooses to subject the States to federal jurisdiction, it must do so specifically.”); see also Dellmuth, 491 U.S. at 230 (“If Congress’ intention is ‘unmistakably clear in the language of the statute,’ recourse to legislative history will be unnecessary; if Congress’ intention is not unmistakably clear, recourse to legislative history will be futile, because by definition the rule of Atascadero will not be met.”).

Moreover, Congress may abrogate state sovereign immunity only pursuant to a valid exercise of federal power. Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 59. Particularly relevant here, Congress cannot abrogate sovereign immunity under its Commerce Clause powers. Id. at 59, 72-73. Instead, the Supreme Court has recognized that Congress can abrogate sovereign immunity only when it acts pursuant to § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment.¹³ See Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S.

consent is not a doctrine commonly associated with the surrender of constitutional rights, and we see no place for it here.” (second alteration in original) (citation omitted)), superseded in other respects by Rehabilitation Act Amendments, 42 U.S.C. § 2000d-7.

¹³ For a relatively short period of time, the Supreme Court held that Congress could abrogate state sovereign immunity pursuant to the Commerce Clause. Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co. 491 U.S. 1, 13-15 (1989). But that decision 445, 456 (1976) (holding that Congress can abrogate state sovereign immunity pursuant to § 5); cf. Cent. Va. Cmty. Coll. v. Katz, 546 U.S. 356, 362 (2006) (declining to decide whether Congress can abrogate state sovereign immunity pursuant to the Bankruptcy Clause of the Constitution).

What we take from those rules is that state sovereign immunity goes to the core of our national government's constitutional design and therefore must be carefully guarded. Yet accepting PennEast's delegation theory would dramatically undermine the careful limits the Supreme Court has placed on abrogation. Indeed, "[t]o assume that the United States possesses plenary power to do what it will with its Eleventh Amendment exemption [by delegation] is to acknowledge that Congress can make an end-run around the limits that that Amendment imposes on its legislative choices." SCS Bus., 173 F.3d at 883. We are loath to endorse a never-before-recognized doctrine that would produce such a result.

4

None of PennEast's arguments for the delegability of the Eleventh Amendment exception are persuasive. PennEast contends that "[t]here simply is no interference with state sovereignty when the United States itself has found that an interstate infrastructure project is both necessary and in the public's interest"¹⁴ and that New Jersey "faces no real 'harm' was overruled. Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 66; see also infra note 20.

¹⁴ In support of that proposition, PennEast relies on Oklahoma ex rel. Phillips v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., 313 U.S. 508

... given FERC’s plenary oversight over pipeline projects and their respective routes.” (Answering Br. at 18-19.) And, the company says, if the State is aggrieved, it “has recourse against the federal government” by way of challenging FERC’s decision to grant the Certificate. (Answering Br. at 22.) Those arguments miss the point. This case is not about whether the States have a chance to register their dissent or concerns about pipeline plans. It is about whether the federal government can delegate its ability to hale fellow sovereigns into federal court and force the States to respond. It is the “indignity of subjecting a State to the coercive process of judicial tribunals at the instance of private parties” that New (1941). There, according to PennEast, the Supreme Court held there was no Eleventh Amendment bar to a private party condemning State land because the dam project at issue had been authorized by Congress and so “there was ‘no interference with the sovereignty of the state.’” The same reasoning applies here, it asserts, because the NGA authorizes PennEast to condemn property that FERC has found necessary to complete a project that is in the public interest.

That misreads Guy. In Guy, the State of Oklahoma sued to enjoin the construction of a congressionally authorized dam, as well as related condemnations. Id. at 511. While the respondents were private entities, federal government attorneys had instituted the condemnation actions. Id. at 511 n.2. And the United States, not the dam company, was going to “acquire title to the inundated land.” Id. at 511. So while it is true that Oklahoma argued the dam would be a “‘direct invasion and destruction’ of the sovereign and proprietary rights of Oklahoma[,]” id. at 512, that was not because the State was being sued by private parties.

Jersey seeks to avoid. Puerto Rico Aqueduct, 506 U.S. at 146 (citation omitted). FERC’s blessing of the project does not speak to that problem in any way.¹⁵

In the same vein, PennEast cites qui tam suits under the False Claims Act (“FCA”), 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729–3733,¹⁶ as proof “that the federal government can delegate its authority to sue” the States, provided the parties act on the government’s behalf and under its control, as PennEast says is the case here.

¹⁵ Again, adopting PennEast’s position that federal agency involvement is enough to conclude that the United States has delegated its ability to sue the States to a private entity would fundamentally erode the Eleventh Amendment and the rules regarding abrogation. If PennEast were correct, Congress could simply amend a statute pursuant to its Commerce Clause powers, give an agency some review responsibility, and thereby skirt any limit on Congress’s ability to abrogate state sovereign immunity.

¹⁶ The FCA authorizes private plaintiffs to sue “for the person and for the United States Government” against the alleged false claimant, “in the name of the Government.” 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(1). The FCA places several conditions on those suits. Before suing, the private plaintiff must first notify the federal government and allow it to intervene. Id. §§ 3730(b)(2), (4). The government can then decide whether to pursue the claim itself or leave it to the individual to pursue on behalf of and in the name of the government. Id. § 3730(b)(4). At that point, the government can intervene in the suit only for “good cause.” Id. § 3730(c)(3). But the private plaintiff also cannot dismiss the suit without the consent of the government. Id. § 3730(b)(1).

(Answering Br. at 36.) We disagree. To begin with, there is a split of authority on whether qui tam suits against States are barred by the Eleventh Amendment. Compare, e.g., United States ex rel. Milam, 961 F.2d at 50 (allowing qui tam suits to proceed based on that court’s view that the United States was the “real party in interest”), with United States ex rel. Foulds, 171 F.3d at 289, 292-94 (concluding that qui tam suits are barred by the Eleventh Amendment, based on Blatchford). While we take no position on that question now, even the cases upholding qui tam suits are of little help to PennEast. As New Jersey highlights, courts upheld suits under the FCA because the suits are brought “in the name of the Government” based on “false claims submitted to the government”; the federal government receives most of any amount recovered; it can intervene in the suit after it has begun; and the case cannot be settled or voluntarily dismissed without the government’s consent. United States ex rel. Milam, 961 F.2d at 48-49 (citations omitted). None of that is true here: PennEast filed suit in its own name; PennEast will gain title to the land; there is no special statutory mechanism for the federal government to intervene in NGA condemnation actions; and PennEast maintains sole control over the suits. Most importantly, while the Supreme Court has “express[ed] no view on the question whether an action in federal court by a qui tam relator against a State would run afoul of the Eleventh Amendment,” it has noted “there is ‘a serious doubt’ on that score.” Vt. Agency of Nat. Res. v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 787 (2000) (quoting Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 348 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring)). Accordingly, the attempted analogy to qui tam suits falls far short of supporting PennEast’s broad delegation theory.

PennEast is also incorrect that New Jersey's sovereign immunity simply "does not apply" in condemnation actions because they are in rem proceedings. (Answering Br. at 48.) The cases PennEast cites are confined – by their terms – to the specialized areas of bankruptcy and admiralty law. See Tenn. Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440, 445, 450 (2004) (concluding "a bankruptcy court's discharge of a student loan debt does not implicate a State's Eleventh Amendment immunity" because "the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction is premised on the res, not on the persona"); California v. Deep Sea Res., 523 U.S. 491, 506 (1998) ("Although the Eleventh Amendment bars federal jurisdiction over general title disputes relating to state property interests, it does not necessarily follow that it applies to in rem admiralty actions, or that in such actions, federal courts may not exercise jurisdiction over property that the State does not actually possess." (emphases added)).¹⁷ In contrast, the Supreme Court has made clear that the general rule is "[a] federal court cannot summon a State before it in a private action seeking to divest the State of a property interest.”¹⁸ Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe of Idaho, 521 U.S. 261, 289 (1997) (O’Connor, J., concurring). And the Supreme Court has consistently recognized that sovereigns can assert their immunity in in rem proceedings in which they own property. Cf. Minnesota v. United States, 305 U.S. 382, 386-87 (1939); see also Fla. Dep’t of State v. Treasure Salvors, Inc., 458 U.S. 670, 699 (1982)

¹⁷ Moreover, States can assert their sovereign immunity in in rem admiralty proceedings, when the State possesses the res. See Aqua Log, Inc. v. Georgia, 594 F.3d 1330, 1334 (11th Cir. 2010) ("In Deep Sea Research, the Supreme Court reaffirmed the vitality of a series of cases dating back to the nineteenth century that hold a government can assert sovereign immunity in an in rem admiralty proceeding only when it is in possession of the res."). Here, of course, New Jersey possesses the property interests PennEast is seeking to condemn, so PennEast's argument is wholly unsupported.

¹⁸ PennEast argues that Coeur d’Alene, in which the Supreme Court held that a tribe’s suit was barred by Eleventh Amendment immunity, does not show New Jersey is entitled to sovereign immunity because, in Coeur d’Alene, a state forum was available, the tribe was effectively seeking a “determination that the lands in question are not even within the regulatory jurisdiction of the State[,]” and submerged lands were at issue, a “unique” type of property under the law. (Answering Br. at 39 (quoting Coeur d’Alene, 521 U.S. at 282-83).) But those facts were only important for determining whether the tribe could bring suit pursuant to Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. at 155-56, which allows suits against state officials for injunctive relief. Coeur d’Alene, 521 U.S. at 281-83. The facts PennEast relies on had nothing to do with the general rule that the Eleventh Amendment applies when a State’s property is at issue. See Coeur d’Alene, 521 U.S. at 281-82 (“It is common ground between the parties ... that the Tribe could not maintain a quiet title suit against Idaho in federal court, absent the State’s consent. The Eleventh Amendment would bar it.”); id. at 289 (“The Tribe could not maintain a quiet title action in federal court without the State’s consent, and for good reason: A federal court cannot summon a State before it in a private action seeking to divest the State of a property interest.” (O’Connor, J., concurring)).

(plurality). New Jersey's sovereign immunity remains very much a concern in these in rem proceedings.¹⁹

¹⁹ The only support for PennEast's position is Islander East Pipeline Co. v. Algonquin Gas Transmission Co., 102 FERC ¶ 61054 (Jan. 17, 2003). In that final order, FERC concluded that the Eleventh Amendment "has no significance" for condemnation actions under the NGA because those suits are not "suit[s] in law or equity" against a State. Id. ¶ 61132. FERC's conclusion is an outlier and one that was reached with little, if any, analysis. More importantly, it is flatly wrong. FERC did not deign to explain what type of suit a condemnation action under the NGA is, if not a suit at law or equity. And the drafters of the Eleventh Amendment evidentially meant that term to be all-encompassing. See Alden, 527 U.S. at 721 ("Each House spent but a single day discussing the [Eleventh] Amendment, and the vote in each House was close to unanimous. All attempts to weaken the Amendment were defeated." (citations omitted)); see also id. at 722 ("The text and history of the Eleventh Amendment also suggest that Congress acted not to change but to restore the original constitutional design. Although earlier drafts of the Amendment had been phrased as express limits on the judicial power granted in Article III, the adopted text addressed the proper interpretation of that provision of the original Constitution[.]" (citations omitted)). In any event, condemnation suits have historically been understood as suits in law. See City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., 526 U.S. 687, 710 (1999) ("Just compensation [for a taking] ... differs from equitable restitution.... As its name suggests, ... just compensation is, like ordinary money damages, a compensatory remedy."); Kohl, 91 U.S. at 376 ("The right of eminent domain always was a right at common

C

Like the Supreme Court, our sister circuits, and the district court in Sabine, we are thus left in deep doubt that the United States can delegate its exemption from state sovereign immunity to private parties. But we need not definitively resolve that question today because, even accepting the “strange notion” that the federal government can delegate its exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity, Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 786, nothing in the NGA indicates that Congress intended to do so. “As a first inquiry, we must avoid deciding a constitutional question if the case may be disposed of on some other basis.” Doe v. Pa. Bd. of Prob. & Parole, 513 F.3d 95, 102 (3d Cir. 2008).

Recall that congressional intent to abrogate state sovereign immunity must be “unmistakably clear in the language of the statute.” Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 786 (citation omitted); see also United States v. Carmack, 329 U.S. 230, 243 n.13 (1946) (explaining that statutes granting eminent domain power to non-governmental actors “do not include sovereign powers greater than those expressed or necessarily implied, especially against others exercising equal or greater public powers” and that “[i]n such cases the absence of an express grant of superiority over conflicting public uses reflects an absence of such superiority”). If delegation were a possibility, one would think some similar clarity would be in order. But the NGA does not even mention the Eleventh Amendment or state sovereign immunity. Nor does it reference “delegating” the federal government’s ability to sue the States. It does not law.”). We are therefore unpersuaded by FERC’s decision and owe it no deference.

refer to the States at all. If Congress had intended to delegate the federal government's exemption from sovereign immunity, it would certainly have spoken much more clearly. Cf. Dellmuth, 491 U.S. at 232 (rejecting the argument that a statute's frequent references to the States were clear enough to abrogate sovereign immunity); Guerrero-Sanchez v. Warden York Cty. Prison, 905 F.3d 208, 223 (3d Cir. 2018) (explaining courts must "assume that Congress does not intend to pass unconstitutional laws" given the "cardinal principle of statutory interpretation that when an Act of Congress raises a serious doubt as to its constitutionality, courts will first ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided" (citation and alterations omitted)). And while the NGA confers jurisdiction where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, "it would be quite a leap" to infer from that "grant of jurisdiction the delegation of the federal government's exemption from the Eleventh Amendment." Sabine, 327 F.R.D. at 141. In short, nothing in the text of the statute even "remotely impl[ies] delegation[.]" Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 786.

Despite that, PennEast contends that, because the NGA does not differentiate between privately held and State-owned property, Congress intended to make all property subject to a Certificate-holder's right of eminent domain. The company also argues that the NGA is best understood in light of its legislative history and purpose, as well as by comparing the NGA to two other condemnation statutes, both of which include explicit carve-outs for property owned by States. Whatever the force of those arguments – and it is slight, at best²⁰ – it does not domain power. See S. Rep. No. 80-429, at 2-3 (1947) (discussing need to grant natural gas companies the right of eminent domain to ensure the construction of interstate pipelines). But it says nothing about Congress’s intent to allow suits against the States.

²⁰ As for the legislative history, it demonstrates that Congress intended to give gas companies the federal eminent

And, as one of the amici, the Niskanen Center, argues, the history of Eleventh Amendment jurisprudence explains the difference in language between the NGA and the two statutes PennEast cites, the Federal Power Act (“FPA”), 16 U.S.C. § 791a et seq., and the statute authorizing Amtrak to exercise eminent domain over property necessary to build rail lines, 49 U.S.C. § 24311(a) (the “Amtrak Act”). When Congress passed the NGA and 15 U.S.C. § 717f(h), in 1938 and 1947, respectively, Congress “was legislating under the consensus that it could not abrogate states’ Eleventh Amendment immunity pursuant to the Commerce Clause[.]” (Niskanen Br. at 14.) Because of that, there was no reason to include a carve-out for State-owned property. See Union Gas, 491 U.S. at 35 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (“It is impossible to say how many extant statutes would have included an explicit preclusion of suits against States if it had not been thought that such suits were automatically barred.”).

Then came Union Gas, which permitted Congress to abrogate state sovereign immunity pursuant to its Commerce powers. Id. at 23 (plurality opinion). Seven years later, however, in Seminole Tribe, the Supreme Court overruled Union Gas and affirmed that Congress can only abrogate state sovereign immunity pursuant to the Fourteenth Amendment. Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 65-66.

The FPA and Amtrak Act, however, “were enacted or amended during [the] eight-year period” between Union Gas change the text of the statute. In the absence of any indication in the text of the statute that Congress intended to delegate the federal government’s exemption from state sovereign immunity to private gas companies, we will not assume or infer such an intent. That is to say, we will not assume that Congress intended – by its silence – to upend a fundamental aspect of our constitutional design. Cf. King v. Burwell, 135 S. Ct. 2480, 2494 (2018) (rejecting a proposed interpretation of a statutory scheme because “[i]t is implausible that Congress meant the Act to operate in this manner”); Guerrero-Sanchez, 905 F.3d at 223 (explaining doctrine of constitutional avoidance). Accordingly, we hold that the NGA does not constitute a delegation to private parties of the federal government’s exemption from Eleventh Amendment immunity.²¹

D

PennEast warns that our holding today will give States unconstrained veto power over interstate pipelines, causing the industry and interstate gas pipelines to grind to a halt – the precise outcome Congress sought to avoid in enacting the NGA. We are not insensitive to those concerns and recognize that our holding may disrupt how the natural gas industry, and Seminole Tribe, a time during which Congress was careful to address state sovereign immunity when drafting legislation. (Reply Br. at 12.) Given that context, the lack of similar language in the NGA is not as persuasive of PennEast’s point as the company would like.

²¹ Because we hold that New Jersey is entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity from these suits, we need not address the State’s alternative arguments.

which has used the NGA to construct interstate pipelines over State-owned land for the past eighty years, operates.

But our holding should not be misunderstood. Interstate gas pipelines can still proceed. New Jersey is in effect asking for an accountable federal official to file the necessary condemnation actions and then transfer the property to the natural gas company. Cf. Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 469, 480 (2005) (discussing how broadly the Supreme Court has defined “public purpose” under the Takings Clause). Whether, from a policy standpoint, that is or is not the best solution to the practical problem PennEast points to is not our call to make. We simply note that there is a work-around.

PennEast protests that, because the NGA does not provide for FERC or the federal government to condemn the necessary properties, the federal government cannot do so. But one has to have a power to be able to delegate it, so it seems odd to say that the federal government lacks the power to condemn state property for the construction and operation of interstate gas pipelines under the NGA. In any event, even if the federal government needs a different statutory authorization to condemn property for pipelines, that is an issue for Congress, not a reason to disregard sovereign immunity. To be sure, such a change would alter how the natural gas industry has operated for some time. But that is what the Eleventh Amendment demands.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, we will vacate the District Court’s order insofar as it condemns New Jersey’s property interests and grants preliminary injunctive relief with respect to those interests, and we will remand for dismissal of claims against the State.

EXHIBIT B

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

Nos. 19-1191 thru 19-1232

In re: PENNEAST PIPELINE COMPANY, LLC

STATE OF NEW JERSEY; NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION; NEW JERSEY STATE
AGRICULTURE DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE; DELAWARE & RARITAN
CANAL COMMISSION; NEW JERSEY WATER SUPPLY AUTHORITY; NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION; NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY; NEW JERSEY MOTOR VEHICLE COMMISSION,
Appellants

On Appeal from the United States District Court
for the District of New Jersey

(D.C. Nos. 3-18-cv-01597, 3-18-cv-01603, 3-18-cv-01638, 3-18-cv-01643,
3-18-cv-01668, 3-18-cv-01669, 3-18-cv-01670 3-18-cv-01672, 3-18-cv-01673,
3-18-cv-01682, 3-18-cv-01684, 3-18-cv-01689, 3-18-cv-001699, 3-18-cv-01701,
3-18-cv-01709, 3-18-c-01721, 3-18-cv-01743, 3-18-cv-01754, 3-18-cv-01756,
3-18-cv-01774, 3-18-cv-01778, 3-18-cv-01801, 3-18-cv-01806,
3-18-cv-01845, 3-18-cv-01851, 3-18-cv-01855, 3-18-cv-01859, 3-18-cv-01863,
3-18-cv-01869, 3-18-cv-01874, 3-18-cv-01896, 3-18-cv-01905, 3-18-cv-01938,
3-18-cv-01942, 3-18-cv-01973, 3-18-cv-01974, 3-18-cv-01976, 3-18-cv-01990,
3-18-cv-01995, 3-18-cv-02001, 3-18-cv-02003 and 3-18-cv-02014)

District Judge: Hon. Brian R. Martinotti

Argued
June 10, 2019

Before: JORDAN, BIBAS, and NYGAARD, Circuit Judges.

JUDGMENT

This cause came to be considered on the record from the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey and was argued on June 10, 2019. On consideration whereof,

It is now hereby ORDERED and ADJUDGED that the Order of the District Court signed on December 14, 2018, is hereby VACATED to the extent that it condemned property interests owned by the Appellants and granted preliminary injunctive relief with respect to those property interests, and the matter is REMANDED for dismissal of claims against the Appellants. All of the above in accordance with the opinion of this Court. The parties to bear their own costs.

ATTEST:

s/ Patricia S. Dodszuweit
Clerk of the Court

DATED: September 10, 2019

OFFICE OF THE CLERK

PATRICIA S. DODSZUWEIT
CLERK

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
21400 UNITED STATES COURTHOUSE
601 MARKET STREET
PHILADELPHIA, PA 19106-1790
Website: www.ca3.uscourts.gov

TELEPHONE
215-597-2995

September 10, 2019

Paul R. Adezio
Office of County Counsel
County of Mercer
640 South Broad Street
PO Box 8068
Trenton, NJ 08650

Maureen T. Coghlan
Archer & Greiner
One Centennial Square
33 East Euclid Avenue
Haddonfield, NJ 08033

Mark A. Collier
Office of Attorney General of New Jersey
Department of Law & Public Safety
25 Market Street
Richard J. Hughes Complex
Trenton, NJ 08625

Richard P. Cushing
Gebhardt & Kiefer
1318 Route 31 North
P.O. Box 4001
Clinton, NJ 08809

Jennifer Danis
Columbia University School of Law
435 West 116th Street
New York, NY 10027

Timothy P. Duggan
Stark & Stark
993 Lenox Drive
Building 2

Lawrenceville, NJ 08648

Jeremy Feigenbaum
Office of Attorney General of New Jersey
Division of Criminal Justice
25 Market Street
Richard J. Hughes Justice Complex
Trenton, NJ 08625

James M. Graziano
Archer & Greiner
One Centennial Square
33 East Euclid Avenue
Haddonfield, NJ 08033

Lela Hollabaugh
Bradley Arant Boult Cummings
1600 Division Street
Suite 700
Nashville, TN 37203

Anna M. Manasco
Bradley Arant Boult Cummings
1819 Fifth Avenue North
One Federal Place
Birmingham, AL 35203

William P. Reiley
Ballard Spahr
210 Lake Drive East
Suite 200
Cherry Hill, NJ 08002

Jennifer Selendy
Selendy & Gay
1290 Avenue of the Americas
17th Floor
New York, NY 10104

Michael F. Voorhees
75 Alexauken Creek Road
Lambertville, NJ 08530

RE: In re: PennEast Pipeline Co LLC
Case Numbers: 19-1191 thru 19-1232

District Court Case Numbers: 3-18-cv-01597, 3-18-cv-01603, 3-18-cv-01638, 3-18-cv-01643, 3-18-cv-01668, 3-18-cv-01669, 3-18-cv-01670 3-18-cv-01672, 3-18-cv-01673, 3-18-cv-01682, 3-18-cv-01684, 3-18-cv-01689, 3-18-cv-01699, 3-18-cv-01701, 3-18-cv-01709, 3-18-c-01721, 3-18-cv-01743, 3-18-cv-01754, 3-18-cv-01756, 3-18-cv-01774, 3-18-cv-01778, 3-18-cv-01801, 3-18-cv-01806, 3-18-cv-01845, 3-18-cv-01851, 3-18-cv-01855, 3-18-cv-01859, 3-18-cv-01863, 3-18-cv-01869, 3-18-cv-01874, 3-18-cv-01896, 3-18-cv-01905, 3-18-cv-01938, 3-18-cv-01942, 3-18-cv-01973, 3-18-cv-01974, 3-18-cv-01976, 3-18-cv-01990, 3-18-cv-01995, 3-18-cv-02001, 3-18-cv-02003 and 3-18-cv-02014)

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT

Today, September 10, 2019 the Court entered its judgment in the above-captioned matter pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 36.

If you wish to seek review of the Court's decision, you may file a petition for rehearing. The procedures for filing a petition for rehearing are set forth in Fed. R. App. P. 35 and 40, 3rd Cir. LAR 35 and 40, and summarized below.

Time for Filing:

14 days after entry of judgment.

45 days after entry of judgment in a civil case if the United States is a party.

Form Limits:

3900 words if produced by a computer, with a certificate of compliance pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 32(g).

15 pages if hand or type written.

Attachments:

A copy of the panel's opinion and judgment only.

Certificate of service.

Certificate of compliance if petition is produced by a computer.

No other attachments are permitted without first obtaining leave from the Court.

Unless the petition specifies that the petition seeks only panel rehearing, the petition will be construed as requesting both panel and en banc rehearing. Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(3), if separate petitions for panel rehearing and rehearing en banc are submitted, they will be treated as a single document and will be subject to the form limits as set forth in Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(2). If only panel rehearing is sought, the Court's rules do not provide for the subsequent filing of a petition for rehearing en banc in the event that the petition seeking only panel rehearing is denied.

A party who is entitled to costs pursuant to Fed.R.App.P. 39 must file an itemized and verified bill of costs within 14 days from the entry of judgment. The bill of costs must be submitted on the proper form which is available on the court's website.

A mandate will be issued at the appropriate time in accordance with the Fed. R. App. P. 41.

Please consult the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States regarding the timing and requirements for filing a petition for writ of certiorari.

Very truly yours,
Patricia S. Dodszuweit, Clerk

By: s/ Kirsi
Case Manager
267-299-4947